CONCERT FEATURING CORY MORROW AND FRIENDS · SPONSORED BY KOKE FM
NOVEMBER 20, 2016 · LIFE AUSTIN AMPHITHEATRE

Before I got involved with The Salvation Army, I had no idea how many people they reach or the extent of their engagement throughout Central Texas. The Salvation Army is helping part of Austin's population that needs it most – women and children who are trying to get their lives back together. – Joe Ogilvie

My wife and I prayed for God to show us where we could begin serving our community, and that's when Bob Cole called inviting me to meet with The Salvation Army. One visit and I was hooked. The Salvation Army cares for the women and children and the homeless in this fine city by giving a hand up, not just a hand out. This is 'religion that is pure and undefiled before God.' (James 1:27). I am blessed to be associated with The Salvation Army. – Cory Morrow

-  Rock the Red Kettle ATX benefits local women and children experiencing homelessness through the services of The Salvation Army Austin Area
 -  The Salvation Army Austin social services programs are designed to break the cycle of chronic homelessness by assisting people experiencing poverty or homelessness to overcome barriers to self-sufficiency
 -  In 2015, 73% of those sheltered in Salvation Army emergency shelters in Austin were women and children
 -  On any given day, there are about 250 women and children living in Salvation Army emergency shelters in Austin and about 450 more women and children on the waiting list
 -  Salvation Army services include emergency shelter, hot meals, child and family therapy, rehabilitation, case management, employment assistance, housing support, life skills training, child care resources and day camps
 -  While parents work or undergo training, children either attend school or are enrolled in pre-school or childcare programs so they may continue in their educational and emotional development with minimal interruption
